Last week, while attending Mission Fuge, we were staying at North Greenville University. During the time we were there, the college was hosting a baseball tournament between High School senior travel teams. These players were working on their skills in hopes to get a scholarship from a University. As I watched these students preparing for their games I noticed something that I thought was interesting. You could tell what each player was good at by where he headed when he first arrived. The player with the great batting average went straight to the batting cage while the great fielder headed over to where someone could hit some balls to him. As far as I know, not one of these players headed directly to a section where they were not as skilled. I thought to myself; wouldn't they be a more complete player if they focused on their shortcomings instead of what they are already good at?

We do the same things in the church, we always want to focus on the areas where we are talented and stay away from those that we can struggle with! You never see a person who is really good at working in the background say, "would you call on me to give my testimony one Sunday morning" or "I would like to start working on an Evangelical outreach team."

If each of us as Christians would use the strengths that God has given us, while continually working on our weaknesses, we would be more efficient servants, and it would lead to a much more efficient Church!

All things in Christ!
Steve Shierling

YOUTH & EDUCATION NEWS:

Rev. Nick Hampton

"In Christ alone my hope is found; He is my light, my strength, my song." When was the last time you really listened to the words you were singing or is it just muscle memory? Do you worship with purpose? Do you worship with passion? The first two lines in this song are so important to the life of every believer. Would you be bold enough to live out the words in this song and let Christ alone be your hope, your light, your strength, your song? Or do you want to continue doing it all alone? Christ invites us into a relationship with Him where we no longer have to bear the weight of this world alone. Would we be bold enough to let Him do what he promised?

Called to serve Him,
Pastor Nick

The girls had a wonderful time at camp and all passed their Hunter Safety Course and will soon receive their certificate. The boys camp was the week of June 17-21. I'm sure they did just as well as the girls. Swimming parties for those not going to camp has also been a blast. Pray for our Children's Ministry. In HIS service, Barbara Waldron
